

Quiz # 1

Write a program which will create 2 child processes using fork(). The parent process will write a string message into a pipe. The first child process will read the data from the pipe and display it on the screen. The second child process will execute the ls -l command using exec() and redirect its output into a text file. The parent process must wait for both child processes to complete execution before terminating.